

ETHICS. INNOVATION. ACTION.

January 9, 2015

To whom it may concern:

It is my pleasure to recommend Lindsey Tucker for internship placement. I have known Lindsey since this past August, when I joined the full-time faculty here at the University of Oregon. She was enrolled in one of my courses, J352: Strategic Writing and Public Relations, which is required of all undergraduate public relations majors.

In just a few months, Lindsey distinguished herself as an intelligent and highly conscientious student with exceptional gut instincts for public relations work. She has a strong background in news writing and editing, and has proven herself to be adaptable and tenacious. Lindsey ended the term with a solid A for the course. In addition, she earned perfect scores on more than one assignment, and her attendance record was spotless.

What truly sets Lindsey apart, though, is her attitude. She displays sincere interest and enthusiasm. Lindsey participates actively in discussion and classroom exercises; she also asks insightful questions, and truly cares about her work. I am so impressed by Lindsey's maturity, poise and work ethic.

With this letter, I wholeheartedly encourage you to consider Lindsey for an internship. She will be a tremendous asset to your organization, and an outstanding ambassador for our university.

Thank you.
